Founding Mothers: From the Ballot Box to the University online exhibit now open

The idea of a citizen is foundational to democracy. Women have been speaking up and demanding their rights to be citizens since the founding of the United States. This Special Collections online exhibit focuses on women in Arizona and asks what strategies led to their success in winning representation at the ballot box and in the University. Whose voices are heard in these debates? Who is left out of these changes? Which issues continue as challenges in our times?
